Let's dig in, soil sister

EDITOR'S LETTER

"Frumpy and not very sexy," my friend, who likes to call herself a 'career tiger' declares. Clearly, she is not crazy about this season's gardening theme. "Plus, is it even feminist?" she adds, as she takes another sip of my homegrown herbal tea. (We're in my garden, ironically her favorite spot). First of all, I think gardening is very sexy. The artistic self-expression, the self-sufficiency in a world of broken systems, the sensuality of sinking your fingers into moist soil - quite the opposite of frumpy!

And feminist? Well, I could actually understand her skepticism. Dismissing domesticity, the women's lib movement of the 1960s instilled the idea that 'real' power could only be found on the work floor, as far away from the kitchen and garden as possible. Meanwhile, stereotypical expressions of femininity - heels, lipstick, lingerie - were replaced with unisex denim dungarees: the uniform of a 'real' feminist.

Thanks to third-wave feminist pioneers such as Madonna and yours truly, we now know that a woman can kick ass in heels and lead a country in bright red lipstick. marlies|dekkers was born out of the realization that femininity can be our superpower, as long as we can explore it on our own terms. Building on the efforts of our dungarees-wearing, feminist godmothers, I came up with the term 'Feminine Feminism', the name of the magazine you're holding. Since then, I never stopped looking for ways to empower women through their femininity. And yes, that sometimes meant reclaiming traditional ways - from the ancient Japanese art of seduction to the joy of cooking - raising a few 'old-school' feminist eyebrows in the process. "When I chose Julia Child* as my muse a few seasons ago, you said I was 'sending women back to the kitchen'. And now, you can't stop making your own jam", I remind my friend, pouring her another cup of tea." "You helped me discover that cooking gives me joy," she admits. "Well, finding your joy is power. Who knows, you may be shopping for a garden hoe soon," I tease. "Or even better: become one myself!", she laughs as she takes off her top to catch some rays amidst my lavender bushes.

Joy is one of the many things I hope to unearth with you this season in my garden. Joy, beauty, creativity and lots of great stories. Together with British gardener and bestselling author Alice Vincent, I explore why gardening is so hot amongst young women right now, while sharing ways to 'rewild your own secret garden' in a juicy how-to article. We get inspired by phenomenal female gardeners from the past, from unlikely garden fanatic Marie Antoinette to Victorian horticulturist Gertrude Jekyll, known as the most influential gardener of all time - male or female. And to be able to get our fingers dirty in style, I designed a fabulous 'Gardenista' Couture Collection, my twist on the iconic denim dungarees worn by gardeners and feminists alike. Yes, the female gardener and (feminine) feminist have more in common than you might think. Both dare to dream. Both claim their space to grow. Both are planting seeds for a better, more beautiful world. Are you ready to join our garden party? Let's dig in, soil sister! I promise it will be 'plantastic'.

All my work as a feminist designer is inspired by muses. Powerful female icons from past and present. Although women have been marginalized for centuries, archetypes of female power have always been there. Through my designs, I bring them to you. To help us shape the world of modern-day feminism.

Female gardeners Gardenista

This season, we get our fingers dirty in style, guided by the phenomenal women who dared to create their own Gardens of Eden. From Greek garden goddesses to Victorian horticultural heroes; from Medieval weed-ing women to Insta plant celebs; these 'gardening angels' show us how to collab with Mother Earth to create beauty, using flowers and plants as paint, and soil and sky as canvas. They urge us to turn our backs on rigid rationality - like the Romantics did during the early 19th century - and reconnect with our wild nature. They dare us to dig in.

A garden, like most things, starts with a vision. You plant a seed, you plant hope; you dare to dream. A radical act of optimism, especially for someone like Victorian garden-er Gertrude Jekyll. Now known as one of the greatest horticulturists of all time - male or female! - she was already losing her sight when she first started garden-ing. A few decades later, best-selling baroness Vita Sackville-West nourished her dreams and seeds with love, sweat and a willingness to fail and learn. By daring to grow, she created the ultimate English garden that is on every garden lover's bucket list. And now, a new generation of gardenistas expresses itself on bal-conies and windowsills, proving that you don't need a big plot of land to dare to be. If you dig deep enough to unearth your dreams, and you are persistent enough to nurse them through the seasons, then you can flourish, wherever you have taken root. Because you have shown: you are a force of (cultivated) nature.

— Marlies Dekkers

My 'Gardenista' Couture Collection was inspired by the iconic denim dungarees worn by gardeners and feminists alike. I crafted a playful, yet sensual silhouette, and selected a jeans-print and rivets to make it look just like the real deal. The bold brown straps, bib buckles and front pocket are giving 100% 'gardenista' chic, while the motto printed on the lining of the bottoms - 'Let your garden reveal yourself' - inspires you to express yourself, within and beyond your garden walls.

Dare to cultivate your dreams!

A pocket full of freedom

Perhaps you wore one as a toddler, playing with mud in your backyard; perhaps you rocked one during the nineties, getting down and dirty to badass girl bands like TLC and Salt-N-Pepa. Well, time to dig up your favorite pair of dungarees, because this practical-yet-sexy style classic is hotter than ever. But how did a farmer staple transform into a feminist symbol and even a fashion icon?

Comfy, sturdy, baggy enough to easily slip in and out of, with a bib and plenty of pockets to keep your hands free - the first pair of dungarees, made by German-Jewish immigrant Levi Strauss in 1853, was every farmer's wet dream. Levi used a tough, indestructible fabric from a town in India called Dongari, hence the name 'dungaree'. As practical on the factory floor as they were on the farm, dungarees became a blue-collar favorite, worn mostly by men. But that all changed during the world wars...

Working women

When millions of men left Britain on military service during WW1, women were desperately needed to 'fight in the fields' at home as farm workers. About these dungarees-clad 'Land Girls', a reporter wrote: "It was a novelty to see the girls really working the land in their working clothes, instead of their printed frocks." By WW2, American women would follow suit, with factory girls claiming the work floor in their denim coveralls, just like poster girl 'Rosie the Riveter' who famously flexed her arm underneath the slogan 'We can do it!'. Frustratingly, the women didn't get paid as much as their male colleagues, but they did get something that inspired them to start changing the gender dynamics: a taste of freedom.

"We can do it!"

— Rosie the Riveter

Lesbian chic

During the 1950s, Hollywood glamorized these wartime working girls in romantic movies, starring icons like Doris Day and Marilyn Monroe who looked absolutely smashing in their overalls. Et voilà: dungarees became fashionable for the first time. The bra-burning feminists of the 1960s however, had very different reasons for claiming denim overalls as their (unisex) uniform. Its baggy shape was used as a protest against the overt sexualization of women; its plentitude of pockets symbolized women's independence: we didn't need men to carry our stuff. It even became a bit of a stereotype: the 'ugly lesbian' in dungarees, rejecting her femininity.

Superpower

But feminism, like fashion, goes in waves. And with a new generation of feminists celebrating their femininity as a superpower - think of Madonna in her Jean Paul Gaultier cone bra in 1990 - dungarees were rediscovered as a piece of clothing that allows you to show your body on your own terms. Combined with oversized plaids (girl band TLC), they help you release your inner tomboy; worn with a tiny bikini (Rihanna) or nothing at all (Mia Goth), the baggy shape actually highlights your curves. Like early 2000s fashion icon Carrie Bradshaw ('Sex and the City') showed by wearing a sexy Marlies Dekkers bra in one scene and playful denim bibs in the next: playing with different personae is a woman's prerogative, liberating and lots of fun.

And here we are, still rocking our dungarees. Yes, Levi Strauss' beloved bibs have come a long way, and so have we. From feminine feminists to fashionistas and female gardeners; we all love the look, but more importantly, we love how dungarees make us feel: free to be who we want to be.

My muse and I

Portrait: Marlies Dekkers

"She reminds me so much of you," my lover said, as he proudly handed me a book with on its cover a matronly Victorian lady, staring at me sternly through her coke-bottle glasses. Hmm, was this his idea of a romantic gesture? As soon as I started reading the book - a biography of British gardening legend Gertrude Jekyll - I realized it was a very romantic compliment indeed! Like Gertrude, I sculpt my vision through color, shape and texture; but where I work with fabric, she used flowers, plants and soil to create her magical gardens.

"Through my garden, I found a new way to flourish."

— Marlies Dekkers

For the first time, I could see gardening as a way to express yourself. Guided by the awesome female gardeners I was reading about - I jokingly called them my 'gardening angels' - I started turning my backyard into my own private paradise. Vita Sackville-West, the best-selling bisexual baroness with a passion for gardening (her love affair with Virginia Woolf inspired the book 'Orlando') motivated me to just dig in and learn by trial and error: "The only thing is to be bold; try the experiment; and find out." Through Maxi'diwiac, the Native American woman behind gardening bible 'Buffalo Bird Woman's Garden', I became obsessed with organic soil and heirloom seeds. And dressed in a flirty, flowery dress that gardenista and Queen of France Marie Antoinette would have loved, I drove a hired van to my favorite nursery to fill it up with organic compost and other horticultural delights. Forget fancy spas; this was now my idea of a romantic daytrip.

There is something very erotic about getting your hands dirty and connecting with nature's lust for life: sprouts bursting from seeds, flowers seducing bees with their intoxicating perfumes. 'In gardens, the main business is sex and death. Beauty is just a by-product' I read in one of my gardening books. I couldn't agree more. But as I, quite literally, became a more 'seasoned' gardener, I learned to appreciate not just the colorful lushness of spring, but also the darker seasons when my garden recharged itself while new life was gestating underground. By surrendering to nature's rhythm, I learned to trust Mother Earth's intuition and reconnect with my own. Like the Romantics who turned their backs on rigid rationality during the early 19th century, I fell madly in love with nature's feminine soul. Through my garden, I found a new way to flourish.

You plant a seed, you plant hope. And for many female gardeners throughout the centuries, creating their own Garden of Eden, away from society's pressures, has been a radical act of hope. I thought of them often, as I sweated and pruned, using flowers and plants as paint, and soil and sky as my canvas. I celebrated their colorful lives and gardens in my collection designs. And when I felt that my paradise was ready, I asked my lover over for tea. While he looked around my garden, absorbing its colors, textures and scents, I asked him what he saw.

"You plant a seed, you plant hope."

— Marlies Dekkers

"You; I see you," he said with a big smile and pulled me close. What happened next is between me, him, the birds and the bees...

Get your gardening glow on in this red-hot Dame de Paris collection! I selected a smooth, glossy microfiber fabric in a juicy shade of red that warms up your complexion and puts a sparkle in your eyes. Referring to the glorious Notre Dame Cathedral, the stunning play of lines frames your curves beautifully, while the straps catch the eye with pink, rope-like details and a spicy saying: 'Baby, it's hot outside.' One of my favorite details can be found at the heart of the bra: the pretty satin bow with a hand-filled, enamel pendant shaped like a rake. Believe me, you'll be 'raking in' the compliments!

Are you ready to roll up your sleeves and get sweaty? To get down and dirty in the soil? For women, the word 'garden' has always been a verb. We don't just sit in it, it's something we do.

Foraging since the beginning of humankind - collecting fruits and berries, identifying edible plants - we developed the extraordinary vision, refined motor skills, and eye for detail needed to successfully grow our own food. No wonder women are considered the inventors of agriculture, while across cultures, deities of harvest and fertility have been female, from Isis in ancient Egypt to Roman goddess Ceres (now you know why grains are called 'cereal'). The following centuries, thanks to something called patriarchy, women would be barred from becoming professional gardeners, but that didn't stop them from performing essential gardening tasks such as pest control, picking fruit and weeding.

Even now, when we enjoy the glories of gardening - hands in the dirt, head in the sun, sweating away - we seem to revive the instincts we share with our hard-working ancestors. We feel wonderfully alive. As avid gardener and actress Louise Erickson once said: "Gardening requires lots of water - most of it in the form of perspiration." Yes, we sweat in order to reap our rewards one day, but often, the greatest reward is the sweating itself!

Why women grow own garden. But the strongest connection I felt was with the writer herself. Like Alice, I am a self-taught urban gardener who didn't grow up gardening (even though we both had grandmothers who loved botany). And like Alice, I've learned since then that we grow through growing things. Time to have a heart-to-heart with my 'soil sister'.

Marlies: Alice, thank you so much for writing your wonderful book 'Why women grow'. A life changer for sure! I would like to start with the same question that you asked nearly 50 women for your book: what drew you to gardening?

Alice: Thanks so much for your kind words! It's a good question: I started this project because I felt I wasn't able to give an answer to it myself. There's a pragmatic answer: I moved to a flat with a balcony, I wanted to grow herbs, gardening grounded me at a time when other parts of my life (my relationship, my career, my home) were falling apart. But that deeper pull - what kept me growing - remained a mystery. For a long time, I thought it was in my bones and my lineage - my grandfathers gardened when I was small. But in the process of writing this book I realized that I

'Why women grow' by Alice Vincent is a magical book. Reading the British gardener and writer's inspiring stories of soil, sisterhood and surviving enabled me to plug into an amazing community of gardening women, without ever having to leave my come from a long heritage of women who gardened whose work I had overlooked. I'm still figuring out what my own personal reasons for gardening are, ironically. I think I do it as a creative outlet, for physical satisfaction, to slow myself down and for beauty.

Marlies: In your book, you compare gardening with motherhood,

'Why Women Grow' book and podcast by Alice Vincent calling them both 'wild messy acts of creation'. Since then, you've become a mother yourself. Congratulations! How would you describe the current state of you mind... and your garden?

Alice: Ha! Well, my child will be five weeks old tomorrow. I found the whole process of pregnancy, labor and parenting (so far, it is extremely early days!) ones of curiosity and fascination. My body endlessly surprised - and continues to surprise - me. Sometimes my mind is wholly incapable of focusing on anything other than the immediate present, which for someone who likes to plan to feel calm is quite interesting. Other times I find myself capable of deep creative thought but with no real time or outlet for it. In those first newborn days I remember telling a friend that I felt deeply unqualified and wildly capable at the same time. I think that's still the case most days. As for the garden, well, that's interesting too - I have been planning a re-design and landscape of the garden for the past year, but due to reasons beyond our control we weren't able to begin until this spring. I'd wanted it to be done by the time the baby arrived; instead, work began two weeks after he did. I've spent the past couple of weeks watching the garden I've worked on for two years be dug up and transformed; a clean slate ready for a new season of planting. That feels a bit like new motherhood - raw, vulnerable, filled with potential.

Marlies: Can you tell us about some of the ways that gardening is an act of feminism for you?

Alice: Everyone I spoke to had different reasons for gardening, but two threads connected all of them: space, and control. As women we are endlessly challenged in having both in society: we are constantly told to take up less space, and constantly having to fight for agency. For me, the act of making a garden - whether that's a window box, or a community garden, or an allotment plot, or a sprawling private estate - is one where we can control how we commune with the land and make space for ourselves. That's a deeply feminist act for me.

Marlies: You say that through gardening, women can cultivate a 'superpower'. How does that work?

Alice: Kind of as described above. But there is something fantastic in being able to create, cultivate and make a space as we want it in cohesion with the earth.

Marlies: Your memoir-cum-botanical guide 'Rootbound - Rewilding a Life', has been called the millennials' answer to Eat Pray Love." Why do you think gardening is so 'hot' right now amongst young women? Any feedback you could share with us from women whose lives changed after reading your book?

"There is something fantastic in being able to create, cultivate and make a space as we want it in cohesion with the earth."

— Alice Vincent

Alice: Oh, I've been so fortunate to hear from readers who have taken something from my work. People have said they've found it comforting while undergoing fertility treatment, heartbreak, grief and recovery, and that is something I still feel very fortunate and slightly overwhelmed to have experienced, in all honesty! I think if the process of 'Why Women Grow' has taught me anything it's that gardening has always meant something to young women, but we've only felt comfortable to elevate it into something we talk and broadcast about at certain times. Now happens to be one of them.

Marlies: I love the fact that had your grandfather's overalls taken in so you can wear them when you garden! Any other gardening quirks or rituals, like lucky tools or special shoes?

Alice: I still use his watering can and I'm very precious over my Niwaki secateurs, which were a 30th birthday present from my brother. Shoes - ha, I usually wear a pair of very ugly hand-me-down grey crocs. I ended up washing them and wearing them on the labor ward, too!

Marlies: Can you tell us a bit about your podcast - so perfect to listen to while gardening! - and your twice-weekly newsletter?

Alice: Thank you! After writing the book I felt there were still so many conversations about women and growing. Writing down a chat with someone is one thing, hearing it is another. In the book, the interview subjects are anonymized to a certain extent due to the intimacy of their stories, so I wanted to approach women who were known for certain things - cooking, perhaps, or design - and give them space to discuss their relationship with the land. It's been amazing to see people resonate with it so much.

Marlies: And last but not least: why is gardening so important for women, now, more than ever?

Alice: We have more equity than our mothers and grandmothers, but we are still fighting for space, time, visibility and agency. Our reproductive rights are being challenged internationally. Connecting with the earth has never felt more urgent.

Marlies: Thank you so much, Alice. Let's keep growing together.

your secret garden

Do you want to live fully? To unlock your potential and make your dreams come true? Then dare to awaken your senses. Engage with the world through the 'antennae' of your soul. Wake up and not just smell the roses, but also see, touch and perhaps even taste them. With these tantalizing Awaken Your Senses collections, I'm inviting you to discover the twisty paths, hidden bushes and forbidden flowers of your sensuality. This season, let's get wet and wild in your secret garden.

We all have a secret garden, the realm of our juicy fantasies and deep desires. And although we don't always act on them - thank goodness, mine could get me arrested - we should at least try to own them. Yes, they may be smutty, kinky or downright dirty, but they are you; an important part of your sensual being. Sadly, after centuries of being shamed into self-censorship as women, we tend to repress our fantasies. We nip them in the bud before they can blossom, giving away our power without realizing it. But it's never too late! Have you been feeling dull lately; are you sleepwalking through life? Time to rewild* your secret garden and reclaim your sensuality. Here's how:

Dig for your romantic roots
 What lays at the roots of your first sexual awakening? In my case, it was my mom's smutty romance novels. The brooding buildup, the detailed scenarios, the cruel pirates with killer jawlines; these stories helped me discover my secret garden (and cum all over it). Research has shown that men primarily get off on visual stimuli, whereas our sexuality is much more layered and complex. Erotic romance novels work for us because they nourish a female need for sexy storytelling. What scenarios used to turn you on? Resow those wild, erotic seeds and own your (filthy) fantasies. You may even want to invite a pirate. Or two.

Water your garden
 Your desires are like plants; you need to water them. And I mean that quite literally: get wet, girl! The secret to unleashing your juice - aka female ejaculation fluid - is giving yourself permission to flow. That, and finding the perfect sex toy. After all, with our sexual parts being quite hidden, it makes perfect sense to use some proper 'tools' to explore that secret garden down below.

And believe me, flowing freely and without shame is one of the most empowering things you can do for yourself. To (mis)quote Cardi and Megan: bring a bucket and a hose for your wet-ass garden!

Smell the forbidden flowers
 Non-monogamy, orgies, sex with a stranger; do you find yourself 'editing' your desires because you feel ashamed? Are you trying to stay away from these 'forbidden flowers' in your secret garden? Don't! If you flip through 'My Secret Garden', Nancy Friday's classic 1970s collection of women's sexual fantasies, you'll soon realize that most women have taboo-related desires that easily top yours. So go ahead, smell your forbidden flowers and feed your fantasies. Yes, you can pick them to share with your lover, maybe even indulge in a bit of roleplay. But sometimes it's enough to let them blossom freely within the safety of your garden walls - there where the wild things are.

Vixen, not victim!

— interview with Marisa Acocella

On Cancer Survivor Day, we celebrate those who have fought cancer and won, while bringing hope to those still battling this terrible disease. With 'Cancer Vixen', Marisa Acocella's powerful, colorful and often hilarious cancer memoir, the American cartoonist has created a life-affirming gift for women on the front lines and beyond: a Sex and the City type tale of a woman kicking cancer's butt - in killer heels! - that inspires hope and some healing laughter. "The word is vixen, not victim."

When Marisa's mother was pregnant with her, she received a phone call from a woman with a husky voice who claimed to be Jackie Kennedy. "Are you the shoe designer? I need shoes to wear to my husband's inauguration," the woman said. Marisa Acocella laughs when she tells me the story: "My mother needed some persuading that she wasn't getting pranked, but a few weeks later, during J.F.K.'s inauguration, the First Lady wore my mother's shoes." For Marisa, shoes are magical. "When I get stressed out, I sketch shoes." Not surprisingly, they also play a big role in 'Cancer Vixen', the bestselling graphic novel that tells the story of a 43-year-old, shoe-crazy, lipstick-obsessed, fashion-fanatic, about-to-get-married cartoonist who finds a lump in her breast. "After I got diagnosed, I was walking along the Hudson River with my best friend Bob. As you can imagine, I wasn't feeling or looking all that glamorous. When I told him I was going to write about my experience, calling it 'Breast Case Scenario', he was like, 'Noooo! That is terrible. You look like a victim! Where's my vixen?' And I thought: "Cancer Vixen, that's it!" So, I drew myself as a cancer-fighting vixen and it felt really empowering." She adds: "Words have so much power."

During Marisa's eleven-month, ultimately triumphant bout with breast cancer, she found strength and comfort in journaling. "While I was receiving chemo treatments, I would sketch with an IV in my hand. It's the best advice I can give anyone going through a traumatic experience: write stuff down."

It gives you a voice. And you may even see the humor in things." The sassy New Yorker also practiced something she likes to call 'the law of distraction'. "To distract myself from the pain, I would focus on something beautiful: my shoes!" To each of her treatments, Marisa would wear her 'support shoes', from metallic blue, snakeskin killer heels to her Giuseppe Zanotti wedding pumps (her fiancée had refused to cancel the wedding). Together with the 'lucky' lipsticks she wore on those difficult days, these were a Cancer Vixen's secret weapons. When Marisa saw her first sonogram, the cancer looked like a black hole to her, but her oncologist chose to describe it as a pearl. It sparked a transformation in Marisa. "I realized that you can go into a black hole - a negative space - or you can see it as an opportunity to be positive, and perhaps even become a better person in the process." At the moment, Marisa is cancer free and positively thriving. Having always been inspired by powerful women, she decided to finally retell the 'herstory' of the world in a fabulous graphic novel called 'The Big She-bang', celebrating 'shevolutionaries' from Eve to Gloria Steinem. 'Cancer Vixen' is about to become an animated series, and Marisa is channeling her renewed respect for Mother Earth into projects such as her 'Divine Mother Earth Time' podcast. I ask her how she celebrates life after overcoming cancer. "By looking after myself and spending time with the people I love," Marisa says, passionately. "And by making the most of every minute."

My Royal Navy collection is designed for women in charge. As a stylish ode to nautical glamor, I created a beautiful matte-green swim collection that shows off your figure in shipshape form. Because you have definitely earned your stripes, I added marvelous, maritime-inspired ornaments in shiny gold-toned metal. I am especially proud of the beautiful buttons that were meticulously sewn on by hand. Wear my Royal Navy Collection and dare to be the captain of your own journey!

Raise your glass to the good life in my timelessly elegant Bellini collection. Dreaming of sipping cocktails by the pool, I designed a collection of sassy, sensual yet supportive bikinis. A vibrant pattern of pretty passionflowers and fresh foliage was printed digitally on smooth recycled polyamide to save water and energy and is guaranteed to add some bohemian chic to any summer wardrobe! As a finishing touch, I planted a gorgeous, knotted bow on your waist and in the middle of your décolleté. Combine with the matching sarong for a look that celebrates flower power in style.

HEALTH IS WEALTH

affordable luxuries

— By Marlies Dekkers

Believe me, I know how easy it is to get caught up in the rat race; skipping nights to make deadlines, pushing myself beyond my own limits. But everything changed with this realization: if you don't feel well, you don't do well. I saw people around me spending their health to gain wealth, and then having to spend their wealth to regain their health. I decided to avoid that trap. One of the godmothers of modern-day luxury, Coco Chanel, once said: 'The best things in life are free. The second-best things are very, very expensive.' Here are a few of my favorite affordable luxuries that help me slow down, recharge and look amazing. Yes, made-moiselle Coco, the post-stroll glow is the new Chanel 'it' bag.

BOTANICAL BEAUTY

Forget expensive miracle potions with tongue-twisting ingredients; when it comes to beauty products, I like to tap into the power of plants. Teasingly called a 'witch-doctor' by my friends, I have always been interested in unlocking the medicinal and mystical properties of the herbs in my garden and beyond. Need a DIY beauty recipe? I got it! Take rosemary oil, for example. According to modern researchers, this traditional hair-growth home remedy is as effective as minoxidil, aka Rogaine

(and way cheaper!). Recently, after switching to a fluoride-free toothpaste concocted by an herbalist friend using ingredients such as coconut oil, horse chestnut and dried mint, my dentist exclaimed: 'Whatever you are doing do to your teeth, it's working!'.

TIP: Already saved some money by using home-made beauty products? Invest it in herbal workshops and foraging courses. You'll expand your botanical knowledge while bonding with some fellow 'witchdoctors'!

LET THE SUNSHINE IN

"The sun comes up for free" we like to say in the Netherlands. Well, that's not the only thing it does for free. Basking in its rays first thing every morning is one of my favorite - and cheapest! - strategies to improve my health and wellness. Our 24-hour internal clock or circadian rhythm affects our sleep-wake cycle through hormone regulation. By exposing ourselves to morning sunlight, we give our system a serotonin boost, providing the pineal gland with enough 'raw material' to produce the melatonin we need to naturally fall asleep that night. On top of that, the sun's vitamin D is absolutely essential for our immune system, brain function and calcium absorption.

TIP: as much as I love my quirky glasses with tinted lenses, I gladly take them off for 20 minutes during my morning sun ritual, allowing the photosensitive cells of my eyes to absorb as much solar healing power as possible.

FREE HUGS

It's the first sense to develop in human beings, and with about 5 million touch receptors in our skin, touch is one of our most powerful and affordable healing tools. Did you know that a single, loving touch can stimulate oxytocin, lower blood pressure, release serotonin and even accelerate cell growth? Even better: it goes both ways, affecting the toucher as much as the 'touchee'. Sadly, living in a touch-phobic society that has made affection with anyone but loved ones taboo, most of us are touch-deprived. And we're not even talking about sex! That's why I make a point of hugging my friends just a little tighter, and holding my father's hand just a little longer.

TIP: On a daily basis, we touch our phones more (an average of 4000 times) than we touch each other. When meeting a friend, put your phones away so you are both ready to reach out and touch!

THE EARTH BENEATH YOUR FEET

Yes, I love my intense workouts with weights, but nothing beats a long walk in nature. First of all, it's free and doesn't require any equipment. On top of all the benefits of cardiovascular exercise, it's proven to boost your immune function and mood while easing joint pain. And sometimes, like in Raynor Winn's case, walking can change your life. When she became homeless and her husband was diagnosed with a terminal illness, they took off on a 1010 km coastal walk. Her deeply moving book 'The Salt Path' added a spiritual dimension to my daily walks, reminding me that when we feel stuck, simply putting one foot in front of another is the only way forward.

TIP: walking barefoot adds even more health benefits by helping you reconnect electrically to the earth (aka 'earthing'). Like Thich Nhat Hanh used to say: 'Walk as if you're kissing the earth with your feet.'

A woman with blonde hair is the central figure, wearing a large, wide-brimmed straw hat and a burnt-orange, wrap-style swimsuit. She is posed in a tropical setting with a swimming pool and palm trees in the background. The lighting is bright and natural, suggesting a sunny day. The swimsuit features wide shoulder straps and a wrap-around design with gold-colored hardware. She is also wearing large, round, gold-colored earrings and a thin gold necklace.

My Cache Coeur collection is designed for beach goddesses, offering both statement design and phenomenal support. Inspired by a stunning tropical sunset I sculpted the perfect swimwear shapes out of a smooth, flattering, burnt-orange fabric. To caress your curves, I used wrap-around satin bandages. I made the shoulder straps extra wide to enhance the streamlined look while providing ultimate comfort. I then added some gold-metal rings and sliders, placed a few charming bows et voilà: ultimate elegance. Wear my Cache Coeur collection and dare to make a splash!

Channel your inner Italian bombshell on the beach in my opulent Dolce Vita collection. To create an iconic look, I overlaid a formfitting, skin-toned base made from smooth recycled microfiber with a stunning black mesh jacquard fabric, its geometric pattern exuding classic swimwear couture. The one-shoulder bikini tops are seriously sexy and feature a detachable strap for extra support; the classy push up top with a halter neck is a brand-new shape. And don't you just love the playful knots? Wear my Dolce Vita collection and swim laps in sheer luxury.

DOLCE VITA / BLACK AND SAND

A woman with long, curly brown hair is sitting on a stone ledge by a swimming pool. She is wearing a large, wide-brimmed straw hat, dark sunglasses, and a blue paisley bikini set. The bikini top is a push-up style with wide shoulder straps and silver-colored buckles. The bottom is a tanga style with a wide waistband and a silver-colored buckle. She is also wearing a matching blue paisley kimono with long sleeves and a wide collar. The background shows a modern building with large windows and a palm tree. The pool water is clear and blue.

My Cache Coeur collection is designed for stylish sirens, offering both statement design and phenomenal support. No wonder she's one of our most beloved bestsellers! This season, I am raising the style stakes by using an opulent paisley pattern - printed digitally onto smooth, recycled microfiber - in a lush shade of blue to sculpt the perfect swimwear shapes. I added wrap-around satin bandages in maritime blue to caress your curves, and wide shoulder straps that are as classy as they are comfortable. Silver-colored rings and sliders and elegant bows are the final touches to this splendid design. The tanga bottom with straps is an exclusive addition to this collection. Combine with the matching kimono and turn the beach into your catwalk!

My Cache Coeur collection is designed for beach goddesses, offering both statement design and phenomenal support. Inspired by river rocks shimmering underwater, I sculpted the perfect swimwear shapes out of a smooth, matte, recycled fabric in a mesmerizing rock-grey shade. To caress your curves, I used wrap-around satin bandages. I made the shoulder straps extra wide to enhance the streamlined look while providing ultimate comfort. I then added some silver-metal rings and sliders, placed a few charming bows et voilà: ultimate elegance. Wear my Cache Coeur collection and dare to make a splash!

Ready, set... jet set! Slip into my sensational Jet Set collection to look resort ready in a flash. To create this streamlined and oh so elegant design, I combined majestic blue, ton sur ton fabrics - one matte, one glossy - in flattering, formfitting shapes, and added delicate halter neck ties. The styles include a strapless top (with detachable straps) and sensual butterfly briefs. But the real eyecatcher is the precious gold-metal horseshoe: a unique MD design. I placed one at the center of the bust, where it creates beautiful subtle pleats, and some on the bottoms, to elevate the back or sides. Dare to make some waves!

Ay, qué preciosa! Blossom on the beach in my luxurious Acapulco collection, inspired by the glamor of the 'Riviera of Mexico' during the swinging 70°. I crafted the perfect, flattering fit out of a smooth recycled fabric featuring a stunning retro floral pattern - printed digitally, greatly reducing our manufacturing footprint - in rich, psychedelic hues. Framing your curves are straps enriched with gold-colored interlocking rings that sparkle in the sun. The collection includes a gorgeous bathing suit and a fabulous kaftan to complete your eye-catching look. Slip into this ritzy collection and dare to live 'la vida loca'!

A woman with long, wavy brown hair is sitting on a wooden deck. She is wearing a black, one-piece swimsuit with a wrap-around design and a wide-brimmed black hat. She is also wearing large, dark sunglasses and several layered necklaces. Her right hand is on her hip, and her left hand is resting on a rock. She is looking off to the side. In the background, there is a turquoise pool and a tropical beach with palm trees and a boat in the distance.

My Cache Coeur collection is designed for stylish sirens, offering both statement design and phenomenal support. I sculpted the perfect bikini shapes out of flattering, deep-black fabric, using wrap-around satin bandages to caress your curves. I then added some strategically placed, charming bows et voilà: ultimate elegance. Wear my Cache Coeur collection and dare to turn the beach into your catwalk!

I designed my Holi Vintage collection for timeless beauties. With its classic, yet seriously sexy cut, this collection is a celebration of timeless magnificence. A cleverly laid-out striped pattern accentuates your curves in all the right places, while an extra strap frames your décolleté and ties in the neck for added style and security. And who can resist a strategically placed little bow? I added them onto the back of the bathing suits and the high waisted bottoms. Wear my Holi Vintage to enjoy your Summer in style!

My SPACE ODYSSEY collection is designed for ladies aiming for the stars. I was inspired by Stanley Kubrick's 2001: A Space Odyssey! Kubrick pays tribute to the big questions in life: why are we here and what is our destiny? This courageous voyage transcending time and space, reminded me of the heroic journeys of women on a MISSION. It's what I wish for you: to boldly go where no one has gone before to understand and FULLFILL your DESTINY. I took the shape of Kubrick's twirling spaceship and translated it into lovely little circular details. Wear my Space Odyssey to radiate star quality.

I was inspired by the magnificence of the NOTRE-DAME CATHEDRAL. Being the epitome of Gothic architecture, the PARISIAN LADY of the 14th century combines a sense of the divine with stunning graphic lines. Graceful arches and elegant bows are her trademarks. An ASPIRATION TO HEAVEN is her belief. I took the Dame's subtle play of lines and put it right on top of the cups. Framing a similar gracious and elegant décolleté. My GLORIA collection is designed for ladies taking the lead. I was inspired by the female gangster movie 'Gloria'. A groundbreaking piece of art in the history of film and FEMINISM. I remember watching this movie as a young woman. I can still feel the SATISFACTION of finally seeing a female lead (Gena Rowland) portrayed as STRONG and DOMINANT, instead of dependent and obedient. For this collection I linked Gloria's strength to the concept of power suits. In my design I translated this into powerful pinstripe patterns and macho suspender straps. Wear my Gloria to release your inner alpha female!

Like a true femme fatale, she strikes men down with her BEAUTY, BRAINS and SEXUALITY. I love how this sensational woman FEARLESSLY manipulates her identity to outsmart her enemies, while using the power of promiscuity to control the world around her.
